Ivan's Childhood

War & coming of age drama, 1962, Andrei Tarkovsky, Letterboxd 4.2
Few war films capture the loss of innocence as powerfully as Ivan's Childhood, the debut feature by the great Russian filmmaker Andrei Tarkovsky. Through the eyes of a young boy serving as a scout during World War II, the film presents war not as adventure or heroism, but as a force that steals childhood itself. Winner of the Golden Lion at the Venice Film Festival, it remains both an unforgettable anti-war statement and a deeply moving human story.

The Piano

Romantic period drama, 1993, Jane Campion, Letterboxd 3.9.

The Piano is a passionate, visually stunning drama that explores desire, independence, and the struggle to find one's voice. Set in nineteenth-century New Zealand, the film follows a mute woman whose piano becomes the center of her emotional and personal world. It is a richly atmospheric story filled with powerful performances, striking landscapes, and complex relationships. Both a sweeping romance and a deeply feminist work, The Piano challenges audiences to think about communication, power, and personal freedom.
